

About Setting The World To Rights

Setting the World to Rights (or The World, for short), is a result of our deeply held belief that it is only ideas that are wrong with the world, and only ideas that can improve the world.

We want this site to speak in a distinctive voice of its own – and in any case, the texts posted here are often collective efforts. For these and other reasons, all posts on the front page of this site are editorials, and have the customary anonymity thereof.

But for the curious among you, those responsible for this web site include David Deutsch and Alan Forrester of Elegance Against Ignorance, with software support by Kevin Schoedel.

We are very grateful to all those who contribute editorials and comments, and if you would like to join in, that would be splendid. We encourage you to send submissions to us at submissions@settingtheworldtorights.com. Items that we like but that can't go on the front page, we attribute to the author, so when you submit an item, please state whether we may attribute it to you or not, and whether you wish your name, email address, and or web site details to be included. If you would prefer your piece to appear as an attributed article rather than a front page editorial, please make that clear in your message.

The software behind this site is Drupal (using PHP and MySQL on Apache) with some custom add-ons.

We'd like to thank Javier Henderson of kjsl.com for providing the web space.

Tue, 04/01/2003 - 13:49 | digg | del.icio.us | permalink