

Elegance Against Ignorance

Several good posts in a row on Alan Forrester's Elegance Against Ignorance, some of them on themes that we have touched on here recently:

This one is about the futility of trying to make horror films more effective by pretending that they are true stories:

it is with The Mothman Prophecies, a film that repeatedly made me want to remove all my skin with a potato peeler and jump in a vat of piranha infested hydrochloric acid just to relieve the boredom.

This one briefly links luminous fish with Republicans.

This one is about schoolteachers being "thieving bastards".

And this one is about the "coolest plane ever".

Wed, 07/02/2003 - 20:25 | permalink