

A Spy at Guantanamo Bay?

Let's hope that Captain Lee is innocent and that this is not a major disaster in the War on Terrorism.

An Army Islamic chaplain, who counseled al Qaeda prisoners at the Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, naval base, has been charged with espionage (Via LGF.) And let's also hope that the media – in all other respects eager to seek out and highlight every possible setback in the war, real or imaginary – are going to report this case thoroughly.

Update: There has been a second such case.

Further update: And now the group that the US military relies on to train Muslim chaplains is under investigation by the Justice Department for allegedly supporting terrorism.

Sat, 09/20/2003 - 14:56 | permalink

is it not clear how Americas'

is it not clear how Americas' actions in Guantanamo are inflaming the anger of the Arab world. America has yet again displayed to the world how selective it is in complying with international law. Guantanamo bay is in breach of the Geneva War Convention and the Universal Humans Rights Act to name but a few. How can it then implore others to treat their prisoners of war humanly.

by a reader on Sat, 12/11/2004 - 19:00 | reply