

EU Turkeys Promise To Be Impartial About Christmas

EU officials are starting a tax funded £5.5 million campaign to "inform" people about the proposed EU Constitution. EU officials promise that it will not be used to promote a yes vote.

There are two possibilities:

- These EU officials are lying; or
- They genuinely think that a vast, unaccountable bureaucracy is capable of dispassionately informing people about a proposal that would greatly increase, and permanently entrench, its power.

Neither possibility bodes well, should these turkeys succeed the referenda happen to yield the affirmative outcome that these paragons of impartiality may or may not want.

Mon, 03/21/2005 - 01:49 | digg | del.icio.us | permalink

Peanuts

I can't support such foolish propaganda from the EU officials. I also must remark that 5.5 million euros is small pocket change in comparison to the amounts spent by the U.S. officials on administrative propaganda.

A spade is a spade. Propaganda is propaganda.

by a reader on Mon, 03/21/2005 - 16:00 | reply

Turkey?

I'm confused. I thought Turkey wasn't even in the EU yet.

by a reader on Mon, 03/21/2005 - 17:00 | reply

Turkey?

I think the initial reference was to the slang: a person considered inept or undesirable. Or, maybe you were joking - it's so hard to tell nowadays.

by Michael Bacon on Mon, 03/21/2005 - 21:42 | reply

Turkey?

Yes, it was a joke, sorry. It really is hard to tell nowadays.

by a reader on Tue, 03/22/2005 - 22:11 | reply

---

Copyright © 2007 Setting The World To Rights